About this Release
This publication contains information about how long people waited to start treatment for Psychological Therapies provided by the NHS in Scotland.

The systems for collecting data locally are still being developed, and as a result, some people who had treatment for Psychological Therapies are not included in this publication. However, the information in this publication does give a good indication of waiting times in most areas of Scotland. NHS Boards are working with ISD and the Scottish Government to improve the consistency and completeness of the information.

Key Points
- NHS Boards have had to develop new systems to enable reporting on Psychological Therapies waiting times.
- During the quarter ending March 2015, around 11,660 people started treatment for Psychological Therapies in Scotland. The initial estimates from data at this stage of development indicate that around 83% of people were seen within 18 weeks. Half started their treatment within eight weeks.
- For this reporting period, four Boards met the 18 week HEAT target and ten did not. The four who met the target were NHS Greater Glasgow & Clyde, NHS Highland, NHS Lanarkshire and NHS Tayside.

Background
The Scottish Government has set a target for the NHS in Scotland to deliver a maximum 18 week waiting time from a patient’s referral to treatment for Psychological Therapies from December 2014. Following the conclusion of previously planned work on a tolerance level for Psychological Therapies waiting times and engagement with NHS Boards and other stakeholders, the Scottish Government has determined that the Psychological Therapies target should be delivered for at least 90% of patients.

Psychological Therapies refer to a range of interventions, based on psychological concepts and theory, which are designed to help people understand and make changes to their thinking, behaviour and relationships in order to relieve distress and to improve functioning. The target applies specifically to Psychological Therapies for treatment of a mental illness or disorder.

The Scottish Government is committed to delivering faster access to Psychological Therapies for those with mental illness or disorder. Patients and clinicians have identified access to therapies as a key service improvement to better meet their needs and expectations. Psychological Therapies have an important role in helping people with mental health problems, who should have access to effective physical and psychological treatment. It is generally accepted that these therapies can have demonstrable benefit in reducing distress, symptoms, risk of harm to self or others, health related quality of life and return to work. The Scottish Government recognises that delivering faster access is a significant and complex challenge, and sees the target as an opportunity to drive local service redesign informed by evidence.
